Ideal for making prints to hang or to sell in your shop. They also make very striking t-shirts.

Large enough to print as posters, lovely for your bathroom, kitchen, or office, or anywhere really, this collection makes a wonderful and unique gift, especially for American art and ephemera collectors.

The colorful silkscreen, lithograph, and woodcut posters were designed by government-commissioned WPA artists to publicize health and safety programs; cultural programs including art exhibitions, theatrical, and musical performances; travel and tourism; educational programs; and community activities. The 46 posters in this collection include many of the most popular and colorful of the thousands of WPA posters produced.

All images on this CD-ROM are 300 dpi JPGs at a size of approximately 19 inches, longest side. They are very large files, approx 12-18 MB each. They have been fully restored to correct colors and remove blemishes. Use with PC or Mac.

Use this beautiful collection of art just for the pleasure of browsing, or making colorful tee-shirts and cards, altered art, collage and decoupage, primitives, labels and tags, and stationery. Also nice for fabric transfers, transparencies, vellum, stamping, stickers, embroidery patterns, quilting & even jewelry making.

The WPA (Works Projects Administration) was the largest New Deal agency, employing millions of people and affecting almost every locality in the United States, especially rural and western mountain populations. It was created by a Franklin Delano Roosevelt presidential order, and funded by Congress with passage of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. The FAP - (Federal Art Project) was the visual arts arm WPA program. It operated from 1935 until 1943. FAP artists created posters, murals and paintings, some of which still stand among the most significant pieces of public art in the country.

The primary goals of the FAP were to employ out-of-work artists and to provide art for non-federal government buildings: schools, hospitals, libraries and the like. The FAP was one of a short-lived series of Depression-era visual arts programs.
