Independence Falls, Colorado. 1954. It was the start of a perfect summer—until the fog rolled in and changed everything. Now these heroes will explore their newfound abilities ... and each other.

Clayton Briggs has always had it easy. The pampered second son of the prestigious Briggs clan, Clayton's back in Independence Falls poised to take over the family business. His playboy days aren't quite over, but his mother is on a campaign to match him with a woman suitable to his station. When he meets a beautiful girl at the Firelight Festival, he's instantly attracted—until he realizes she's a member of the notorious Murphy family. The Murphys and Briggs have been feuding for decades, but Clayton can't control his feelings for Cora. Will passion trump family responsibility?

Cora Murphy has always had it hard. When she isn't scraping together pennies by baking for the town's wealthy families, she's all but a slave to her father and brother, who drink and gamble away most of her profits. She could run, but Cora won't leave her sister behind. All she needs a bit of luck, but luck has never sided with the Murphys. Then her entire life changes in one moment. When Cora is caught in a mysterious purple fog at the Firelight Festival, she suddenly discovers powers beyond anything she's ever imagined. And it seems Clayton might be the only man who understands ... because he has powers of his own.
