HER HEAD KNOWS THAT BEN IS ALL WRONG FOR HER--

So why won't her heart listen to reason?

Meeting a gorgeous man on the beach in Tortola is an invitation to a holiday romance, especially when they both agree it ends when the holiday is over.

Madison knows that Ben is way too young, way too reckless, way too....dangerous. So why does she give him her phone number?

??? HE PUSHES HER BOUNDARIES--

She knew there were definitely other parts of Ben's nature that disturbed her far more than his morning cheerfulness. Buckled into her seat in the open jeep, she clutched the roll bar and bit her lip to keep from whimpering as they rounded a corner far too fast on a steep and winding hillside.

"Look down there, Chiquita, at the turquoise water below those cliffs. Isn't that a magnificent sight?" He gestured with one hand and steered with two fingers of the other, looking at the sharp drop off below. Madison's stomach lurched.

The road dropped off sharply to the bay far below. Madison sucked in her breath. There were no guardrails! If Ben steered an inch too close, they'd. . .they'd. . .

She clasped her hands over her eyes.

"What is it?" Ben said.

She was ashamed to admit to him that she was terrified of speed, queasy about heights. She hated to admit to weakness of any sort- -and right now Ben was challenging her on both counts.

??? HE TOUCHES HER HEART--

"We're just not compatible, you and I," she whispered, watching his handsome, sleeping face. "We both recognize that by now. I'm not wild, or free, or impetuous like you. I'm a ball breaker, a tough, methodical attorney. I thrive on order and caution and you live way out on the edge. How could that ever work?"

But she couldn't stem the longing, and a tiny, traitorous part of her wished with all heart that at some point in the few hours they had left together, Ben would ask to re-negotiate the terms of their deal.

How she wished.....
