Postcard From A Distant Cousin Zan McDowell

A "coming of age" story that explores the lighter and darker side of human nature and man's need to worship. Émile, a young boy, grows up with some exposure to the ancient traditions employed in the worship of Dagon, God of the Philistines. At that tender age, he is unaware of their significance to his own life or within the context of broader societal expectations. As a young adult in the quest for knowledge and self-knowledge, he finds himself accidentally caught up in the battles of the Faith for survival in an intolerant world, encountering both the gentleness and destructiveness of humans. A strange, disconcerting story of isolation, endurance and human fate underscoring the absurdity of man's existence.
