Bryan Blackburn inherits his grandmother's house deep in the hills of Eastern Kentucky. After returning to the house he begins to have dreams of an evil ancestor, ending with him witnessing the nightly attack and murder of a mysterious young woman. Bryan's visits to the past become reality. He is not dreaming, he is traveling back in time as a ghost from the future. His trespass into history has also allowed the ancestor to dream into the future, to come forward into Bryan's life. Bryan wakes to find murders he dreamed of committing in the present actually occurred. In Bryan's research to learn his heritage he discovers a family curse, only one child, a male, in each generation, and all suffer an early death. Was this his fate as well? As Bryan's personality and appearance change to resemble the evil man in his dreams, Bryan concludes that he must return to the house, to confront the ancestor in his dreams, ghost to ghost, and end the nightly torment and murder of the young woman. He must free the haunted souls that reside in the house and free his family from the curse before it strikes his young son, Benji.
