Radio Rose knows Martians aren't real.

As a DJ for a late night talk show about aliens, Rose Wajnowski could never admit to being a non-believer. Talking to crazies all night isn't the perfect job for most people, but she's happy with her solitary life, until a middle of the night car crash and a blow to the head has her mistaking a reclusive rodeo cowboy for a real life extra-terrestrial.

Adam Cameron, raised by his narcissistic grandfather for most of his childhood, made his escape from Tullyville, Colorado the day he turned eighteen. Forced to return ten years later for the reading of his grandfather's will, he's about to be pulled into a contest for a vast fortune and the future of a town he'd just as soon forget.

Relationships aren't one of Rose's strong points. Hell, she mistook the hot cowboy for an alien the first time they met, but Adam needs help and she's the woman to help him--maybe.

In a town filled with new found friends, Rose has to decide how far she's willing to go to trust the loner.
