Three student teachers from three very different backgrounds are about to embark on a journey to change their lives for ever. 'The boy sitting in the front row of the first class Catherine had ever taught looked very familiar. This is because, only two nights earlier, her lips had been glued to his on the dance floor of Plug on Matilda Street.' 'Her first morning as a student teacher was only an hour away and as Dee caught her bloated reflection in the mirror, she was forced to question whether, after almost ten years of night classes, funded by dead-end jobs and Wonga, this would be just another part of her life that she'd fail to nurture.' 'Naomi had expected the language to be bad, manners to be none-existent and appearances to be shabby, but that had just been the teachers.' Catherine, Dee and Naomi begin as strangers, but as they each overcome heartache to achieve their goals, they discover they share far more than just ambition.
